If you're shopping for the AKASO EK7000 Pro, the closest direct swap is the AKASO EK7000 4K30FPS Action Camera with 64GB microSDXC Memory Card. It's almost the same price as the Pro, but it adds a memory card in the box, which is a handy win if you want to get filming straight away. Compared with the EK7000 Pro, it may be the simpler choice if you don't care as much about the touch screen or the newer user experience. The upside is value and convenience; the downside is that it's less clearly positioned as the more refined model. Choose this if you want the same general action-camera format for paddleboarding, kayaking, bike rides, or surf clips without paying extra for features you may not use.

The Helly Hansen Rider Vest Buoyancy Aid in Ebony, 70 to 90 Kg, is not a camera alternative in the literal sense, but it is a much better buy if your real priority is time on the water rather than filming it. At £41.49 and a strong 4.7★ rating, it's cheaper than the AKASO and far more important for safety on UK waters, especially in cold or changeable conditions. What's better is confidence, buoyancy, and visibility; what's worse is that it won't record anything. If you're paddleboarding on reservoirs, estuaries, or coastal water where a buoyancy aid is sensible or required, this is the smarter purchase and the camera can wait.

The Helly Hansen Rider Vest Buoyancy Aid in Ebony, 60 to 70 Kg is the same idea, just for a different weight range. It offers the same strong rating and low price, so it's a solid alternative if the fit matches you better. Compared with the AKASO, you're trading tech for practical protection, which matters a lot more in choppy conditions, colder months, or when paddling alone. It's the right pick for lighter paddlers who want a snug, reliable vest for SUP, dinghy sailing, or coastal use. If your main goal is safety on the water, this beats a camera every time.

The Osprey Men's Osp M - Origin Shorty Wetsuit, Blue, 3XL UK is a good alternative if you're not actually set on an action camera and you're looking to stay in the water longer. At £39.99, it undercuts the AKASO and is especially useful for spring and summer sessions in the UK when the air might be warm but the water is still brisk. Better points: warmth, comfort, and more time paddling or swimming. Worse points: no filming features and less use in colder shoulder-season conditions. Choose this if you're a bigger-framed paddler, beginner surfer, or open-water swimmer who wants more comfort than content creation.

The Osprey Men's Osp Lng 5mm - Origin Blk Full Length Wetsuit, XL UK is the premium watersports pick here. It's much more expensive than the AKASO, but it gives you full-body warmth and better cold-water protection, which is a huge deal for UK autumn, winter, and early spring sessions. What's better is thermal performance and versatility in rougher conditions; what's worse is the higher price and the fact it's obviously not a camera. If you're spending long periods in cold sea water, or you want to extend your season, this is the strongest alternative for actual watersports use.

In short, the AKASO remains the best choice if you want an affordable waterproof action camera with a familiar feature set. But if your priority is safety or staying warm on the water, one of the Helly Hansen or Osprey options may be the better buy.

Still Buy the Original If...

Stick with the original if you want a budget-friendly 4K waterproof action camera with a touchscreen and accessories kit. It's a sensible pick for recording surf, paddleboarding, kayaking, or family water days without spending GoPro money.
